Archaeologist, Stephen Post, Presents

“Pueblo Revolt & Revival: A View From Santa Fe”

Shortly after Pueblo warriors and their allies expelled the Spanish from Santa Fe in August of 1680, an adobe pueblo was built by villagers from Galisteo, Tesuque, and Cochiti pueblos. Described as a walled fortress in 1692, and demolished by Governor Cubero in 1697, poorly known "lost" pueblo is the subject of periodic speculation by historians and archaeologists. Inspired by the 2017 Fiesta Symposium, Post developed an updated speculative model for the location, size, and layout of the Pueblo Revolt Pueblo using historical and archaeological information. His talk presents this "new" model within the context of current archaeological research themes and context of the Pueblo Revolt and its consequences. Post advises land conservation groups and is the Society Archaeologist for the Santa Fe Archaeological Society.
